In and , Pepsi was falling behind Coke in the cola wars. Coke was distributed far more widely than Pepsi, and G.I.s had spread the taste for Coke to many more countries than Pepsi. So Pepsi put on a marketing blitz, hoping to continue the success it had in with its ad jingle (and eventual hit record) "Nickel Nickel." Part of this marketing blitz was to bring back Pepsi the Pepsi. The "Nickel, nickel" phrase was used as a verse, and "Pepsi-Cola Hits The Spot" was the refrain; The jingle became so popular that full-length recordings were released to be played by radio stations instead of the jingle being merely a "tag" for the announcer's spoken commercial words.
